Booster Seats

New rules on the use of booster seats will come into effect from December 2016. Currently children must use the correct type of car seat until they are 12 years old or 135cm. Many parents and carers use backless booster seats to meet the car seat requirements for children once they are too big for their Group 2 seat. However, there is a concern that backless booster seats don't offer adequate protection, especially to smaller children. Under the new rules, backless booster seats will only be approved for use by children taller than 125cm or heavier than 22kg. If you already have a backless booster seat you will be able to continue using it, but from December all new booster seats will not be approved for children smaller than 125cm.
